

Subject: American White Face Quaker's

Hello:

I had to finally drop in and tell you what beautiful QP's you have created. The picture you have posted of the America White Face Male is absolutely gorgeous! I have never seen a Quaker soooooo stunning...ever! I, also, like the all white Quaker. It brings tiny tears to my eyes that you actually are calling them "AMERICAN"! It has been so long since our country has actually had real pride in itself, and to see someone who has created a living being, and then named it "American" is very special. You must be a true American Yourself. I am proud to, well, at least e-mail you. This country needs more people to be proud of it. AMERICA IS #1 and always will be. Back to your creations - all of them are pretty, I am just partial to the white face blue, and the all white. I have a green Quaker that I got 6 months ago, and it has been a joy ever since. I really didn't know I was living until I got "her". I have been looking to get a Blue next, but there aren't any for adoption on Craigslist right now. Anyway, that is how I originally found your site. I ran across it about a year ago when I was looking to adopt my TeiKei Byrd. I drop in every once in a while to see what is new. But, this time I couldn't leave without telling you how proud I am from one American to another. I watch Dillard's Aviary site, also. One day I hope to have enough land to have Alpaca's and Llama's. They are really neat animals.

I have a couple technical questions for you if you wouldn't mind? I belong to quakerparrots.com and they claim on that site that mutations come from inbreeding. Is that true? They also, claim that mutations of Quakers are weak birds, and have not been around long enough to know if they will live long.

What are your thoughts on that? There is a vet assistant from TX on there claiming that blue Quakers are right now coming in with genetic problems, and dying off easily. They think this might be a problem with inbreeding in the U.S. to keep up with the demand for blues. I think I may have to hold off on getting a blue for awhile. I can't take an animal death in my life anytime soon. I'm not really sure if any of that is true or not. It is just what I read on that forum.

If you get time, will you let me know how much you sell your new mutations for?

One day, if I ever have enough money to buy a baby, yours would be the one, so I would like to know what I am in store for, please? You do sell yours, right? Do you sell babies, or older birds? Come to think of it, I didn't see anywhere on your site that gave prices or availability. Let me know if you even sell you beauties.

Maybe I'm jumping the gun.

Well, have a great day. Good luck on any new adventures you may seek.

And...again, Congratulations on your success!
